this little scene? The other passengers paid no attention to her. For the hundredth time I was about him. There was a way out of the knot, if he turned around so, and then so, and parted the. He stopped before an oak door. Instead of knocking he sketched a little sign or rune on it with the top of his staff, a light staff of some greyish wood. The door opened as a resonant voice behind it said, "Come in!" a collateral line of the House of Enlad, inheriting the throne from a cousin; his forebears were. The Bones. "Anyone can make a fist and show a palm," said the tall woman, pleasantly. "But not everyone can fly to Roke. Or swim, or sail, or come in any way at all. So we must ask what brought you here." "She spoke with the other breath," Azver said. . . him always from the left and the early sunlight on the sea out past the vast shadow of the. He thought what he must do, and how he must do it. He wasn't sure whether he had summoned her or she had come of her own will; he didn't know how she had spoken the word of the Old Tongue to him or through him. He didn't know what he was doing, or what she was doing, and he was almost certain that the working of any spell would rouse Gelluk. But at last, rashly, and in dread, for such spells were a mere rumor among those who had taught him his sorcery, he summoned the woman in the stone tower. . . trying to clean his legs. "Dirt, dirt," he said, gently patting the ground he sat on. Then, very. drew back a little. She drew back. They sat back on their ankles. . . The ship's weatherworker came aboard just before they sailed, no Roke wizard but a weatherbeaten fellow in a worn sea-cloak. Ivory flourished his staff a little in greeting him. The sorcerer looked him up and down and said, "One man works weather on this ship. If it's not me, I'm off." . . some sort of justice, and fighting off petty tyrants. As order and peace returned to the. They listened to him, not agreeing, not denying, but accepting his despair. His words went into. Dulse had been unable to answer at all for a while. Then, stammering, guilty at his ingratitude. Ogion shook his head. He let his sending sit down in the grass near Heleth, though it did not bend the stems of the grass where it stepped or sat. "I've done nothing but set the city in a panic," he said. He asked her, rather timidly, to tell him what the Immanent Grove was, for when he had asked others they said, "Ember can tell you." She refused his question, not arrogantly but definitely, saying, "You can learn about the Grove only in it and from it." A few days later she came down to the sands of Thwil Bay, where he was repairing a fishing boat. She helped him as she could, and asked about boat-building, and he told her and showed her what he could. It was a peaceful afternoon, but after it she went off in her abrupt way. He felt some awe of her; she was incalculable. He was amazed when, not long after, she said to him, "I'll be going to the Grove after the Long Dance. Come if you like." . . tremendous, but fortunately she was stupid, and he was not. ONE WINTER AFTERNOON on the shore of the Onneva River where it fingers out into the north bight. how to do it. There had been illusions, little spells, pebbles that turned to. By that time there were many people of the Hand who knew what was afoot on Roke. Young people came there sent by them. Men and women came to be taught and to teach. Many of these had a hard time getting there, for the spells that hid the island were stronger than ever, making it seem only a cloud, or a reef among the breakers; and the Roke wind blew, which kept any ship from Thwil Bay unless there was a sorcerer aboard who knew how to turn that wind. Still they came, and as the years went on a larger house was needed for the school than any in Thwil Town. . . language.
